DISC Interiors, established in 2011 by co-founders Krista Schrock and David John Dick in Los Angeles, are known for their soulful homes, blending contemporary and traditional detailing and furnishings, along with a deep appreciation for craftsmanship. In their practice, they attempt to create interior and architectural balance, designing spaces that have structure, purpose, and provide places of comfort for their clients.

At the hands of DISC Interiors, a 1930's residence was redesigned for a family searching for their forever home in Holmby Hills, a historical tree-lined neighborhood in Los Angeles. Interior walls were removed, and windows were reconfigured to allow the interior spaces to have a sense of contemporary scale, while paneling and the historical details were kept, and built upon further. A true chef's kitchen, inspired by classic English kitchens that never date, and a walk-in wine cellar with glass doors, were incorporated into the redesign. Chalky white custom cabinetry and leathered Italian marble surfaces in the kitchen complement the antique furnishings and English ceramic lighting fixtures. Down the hall, the powder room was resurfaced with muted limestone, and fixtures were replaced with a French two-toned copper/brass faucet and hammered bronze sink.

Off the main living room, the paneled speakeasy bar has muted tones of pink, and weathered oak, and glows into the evening with conversation when the clients entertain. The master bathroom suite was redesigned to allow for a soaking tub, and an oversized oak vanity with bronze pulls was made to feel like it had always been there. The tones of Italian marble, and earthy finishes in the master bathroom connect to the master bedroom's material serene palette of warm neutral velvets, linens, leathers, and antique brass.
